For example, describing a product or experience with words like "velvety," "crisp," or "warm" creates tactile and emotional associations that make the audience crave more. He recommends that speakers: - Identify the core emotion they want to evoke - Choose sensory words aligned with that emotion - Use vivid language to paint a compelling picture

Different audiences respond to different sensory cues. Conduct audience analysis to identify which sensory appeals resonate most and customize your language accordingly.

Richards recommends creating personal lists of sensory words, practicing their integration into speech or writing, and seeking feedback to hone your skills.

Use sensory words to reset attention and re-engage your audience during presentations or conversations.

Common Pitfalls and How to Avoid Them

- Overuse of Sensory Words: Excessive sensory language can overwhelm or appear insincere. Use sparingly and strategically. - Lack of Authenticity: Avoid words that feel forced or disconnected from your actual experience or product. - Ignoring Audience Preferences: Not all audiences respond equally; tailor your language accordingly. - Neglecting Context: Ensure sensory words match the tone and purpose of your message.
